Canadian investment strengthens critical minerals partnership

Perpetua Resources brings innovative technologies to sustainably mine the brownfield Stibnite Gold Project, which is located in central Idaho, approximately 10 miles east of Yellow Pine. Rich in gold and antimony, this Canada-Idaho project will help the U.S. secure critical minerals required for the future of technology and defense industries.

The project will redevelop a site abandoned in the 1990s and provide long-term economic benefits, such as stable local jobs and business opportunities, to rural communities. It will invest more than $1 billion in Idaho and directly employ more than 500 individuals over the project's 20-year lifespan. This is an example of how Canadian investment in Idaho can help local communities by creating jobs and providing expertise to help American technology and defense industries.

Ranching traditions shared between Idaho and Canada

The cattle industry has long been a vital link between Idaho and Canada, fostering economic and agricultural ties across the border. Canadian genetics and feed innovations help Idaho's ranchers, while Canadian producers bring business to Idaho's processing facilities to supply the U.S. market. This well-developed partnership thrives under shared standards for animal health and food safety, ensuring smooth cross-border movement of livestock and beef products. Beyond commerce, the relationship reflects a mutual commitment to sustainability and rural prosperity, making cattle not just an industry, but a bridge between two regions with deep ranching traditions.
