WYOMING & CANADA
Partners in security & prosperity

Energy forward

With Canada and the United States being each other's largest and most secure energy suppliers, and with our nations' highly integrated energy infrastructure, the North American energy market has kept the lights on for Americans and Canadians alike. One of the firms leading the way is Canada-based Enbridge, which invests in traditional and renewable forms of energy to create a diverse portfolio ready to meet every demand. The Cowboy State is a critical partner in Enbridge's binational footprint, with the Express Pipeline delivering crude oil from Hardisty, Alberta to Casper, Wyoming. The Express Pipeline interconnects with Enbridge's Platte Pipeline, which stretches from Casper to Indiana and has storage facilities in Casper and Guernsey. This investment cannot exist in a vacuum, with Enbridge creating local jobs to maintain its facilities and product, and injecting millions into the local economy via salaries and tax revenues.

Power and presence

Calgary-based TransAlta, one of North America's leading wind energy generators, purchased Wyoming Wind in 2013. Though the company has had a U.S. presence for 25 years, the 144 MW facility was the company's first wind project in the U.S. TransAlta operates 13 U.S. facilities that can produce more than 1,700 MW of reliable energy from gas, hydro, solar and wind. The company's presence in the western U.S. is notably focused on renewable energy development, as they are committed to sustainable development practices and positioning themselves for success as an energy leader of the future.
